1

Data and Evidence

A range of data sources are available to help you identify inequalities and support you to identify HiAP priorities

Public Health can help you to identify appropriate data sources, provide links to relevant and timely data and support with interpretation.

3

Other Health Impact Assessments

In addition to HEAT, you may want to consider other tools to identify health inequalities.

Public Health can discuss what tool is suitable and provide ongoing support as needed.

4b

Evaluating Health Impacts

Once you have identified your targeted HiAP actions, it is important to measure their success and impact on improving health and wellbeing and tackling health inequalities.

Public health can help identify what indicators are appropriate based on your area of work and support with ongoing monitoring.

2

HiAP Workshops (team to team chat)

Public health will be able to develop and deliver an introductory, bespoke workshop to explain HiAP and help identify where and how the team can implement a HiAP approach. For example, this has been done for senior managers at WCC, Place-based partnerships and service/ department level.

Public Health can then provide follow-up support to help with action planning.

4a

Health Equity Assessment Tool (HEAT)

The HEAT is a practical framework that enables you to systematically embed action on health inequalities and equalities in their work programme or service.

Public health can support with a discussion on the use of the tool and provide ongoing support as needed.

5

Mini HiAP Workshop for a Project

Once you have identified where a HiAP approach may be needed, as identified by the evidence from HEAT/data there may be a requirement for a more focussed piece of work.

Public health will support your action planning process for this piece of targeted work. This may involve setting up a task and finish group.

7

Process Review (embedding into documents)

Systematically embedding the HiAP approach into your existing processes e.g., business case documents, strategy development documents, procurement documents, performance monitoring indicators etc

Individual Discussion

The Public Health HiAP team are available to have individual conversations at any point in the process to support embedding HiAP process into your work. phadmin@warwickshire.gov.uk
