

THE ELSA PROGRAMME

The Emotional Literacy Support Assistant (ELSA) programme is an evidence informed approach to supporting the social, emotional and mental health (SEMH) of children and young people. The nationally recognised programme builds capacity within primary and secondary schools to support SEMH needs through training teaching assistants/learning mentors to develop and deliver individualised support programmes. This enables schools to intervene early when social, emotional or well-being needs are identified, and the setting of targets and progress evaluation allows schools to evidence the impact and response to intervention. ELSA training and reflective group supervision is delivered by experienced Educational Psychologists.

ELSA recognises that children and young people learn better and are happier in school when their emotional needs are met.

EVIDENCE AND IMPACT

The programme has gathered an evidence base through peer review publication of results of analyses, as well as local authority evaluations and reports. It is now available to primary and secondary schools in more than 100 local authorities. Research has shown the positive impact on: wellbeing, emotional regulation, relationships, resilience, academic attainment, attendance and social skills of children and young people involved.
